DUCATIONAL APPEAL.—To PARENTS, GUARDIANS, PASTORS, TEACHERS, AND THE PLOPE.—Fellow Laborers: It is wisdom in all men to rightly estimate men and things, and render to each their due. Not to do this is the obsence of all wisdom. I rejoice to see so many pleasing indications that the great subject of Education is about to have due prominence giveriot in it this country. Many great and good causes have had their day, while this greatest and best of all causes has been overlooked and forgotten by the masses of the people in both Church and State. But why has it been thus? Why have individuals, communities and nations slimbered so long and so profoundly over this subject—a subject second to none in point of importance? Education is the keystome to the great arch of the world's happiness; hence, not to give it due prominence is a said deficiency, and the darkest feature of our times. We live in a most important period of the world's history, and without a proper understanding of this subject we cannot be qualified to act well our several parts in this great theater of the world. Impressed with the magnitude of the work before us, I am constrained to make my appeal to you, and suggest the propriety of getting up some well organized method of efficient action.

It is now a favorable selanon of the year to commence courses of lectures, and, rightly understood, the subject is did of interest to all people, and capable of being presented.
